

The God We've Created excerpt-

When I was an 18 year old student nurse I began to dream of a world free of disease and pain and tears. I never spoke of these thoughts, it seemed absurd amidst the horror and tragedy all around. At 25 years old the fantasizing became an intense hope and by ten years later, I was convinced that I would live to see the reality of the dream.

I had long ago given up on science or medicine as a solution to the problem of human suffering. That path only seemed to intensify the situation.

I sought my answers just following wherever the passion and hope within my soul led me. I trusted I was being deliberately drawn and eventually I found my way into the heart and mind of God. There I found the world that I sought so diligently. Everything now became new and different, clean and whole. It was as if awakening to a new world, yet one that I had lived in for ever. It was a world of thought, of vision, of purpose. And the most exciting thing was that everyone who found it, found healing and correction and restoration. Without exception.

It is as near as the breath you breathe. It is my desire that page by page will carry you to this life changing understanding.

Can mankind live in such freedom? Were we supposed to, after all? Is it possible for anyone, everyone, no matter their present condition?

And the whole of eternity answers a resounding "YES!"
